

How to Access Playlists

1. Click on your chosen playlist image.

You'll see a blurb about each playlist. Click on the link and the playlist will open in a new window.

2. Sign in to Spotify (first time only).

Don't worry, it's free! (I'm not affiliated with Spotify, by the way. I just use their playlist sharing service because it's the simplest way I know to share music for free.)

If you're new to Spotify, you'll be asked to sign up. And you can just use your Google or Facebook ID, which means: no new passwords to remember (or should I say, forget).

Once your device has remembered your login details, you should be directed to Spotify automatically, next time you click on a new Resource Library playlist, i.e. no need to sign in next time.

3. Listen to the playlists anytime, via the Internet.

There is a membership option but it's just that: an option. Personally, I listen to my Spotify playlists quite frequently but I've never joined or paid a cent. I guess the only drawback is the ads... Once every 30 minutes there's an advertisement. It's a bit like listening to the radio.

NB If you're listening on a PC (rather than through the mobile app) you'll need to log in to Spotify Web Player to hear the playlists.

4. Optional: Make your own playlist

If you like a few of the songs I've chosen, but don't like all of them, it's easy to create your own playlist. Just click on the ellipses (...) to the right of the songs you like best and select "Add to Playlist", then select "Create" (on top right).
